"J" REVIEW DISCUSSES GENERAL, MONTANA PRESS

Fourteen articles, including eight that discuss the Montana press, appear in the 1967 edition of the Montana Journalism Review.

The 40-page periodical, issued each spring since 1958 by the University of Montana School of Journalism, is being distributed this week to journalists, educators and research scholars throughout the United States.

The lead article, "The Flourishing American Daily," is the text of a speech by Dwight E. Sargent, curator of the Nieman Foundation at Harvard University, to the 11th annual Dean Stone Night banquet at the University of Montana last month. Mr. Sargent, former editorial-page editor of the New York Herald Tribune, also was the 1967 professional lecturer at the journalism school.

Other articles are by Sam Reynolds, editorial-page editor of the Missoula Missoulian and a visiting lecturer at the journalism school during fall and winter quarters; Acting Dean Edward B. Dugan; Warren J. Brier, associate professor and editor of the periodical; journalism graduates David M. Rorvik, Robert J. Goligoski, the late William G. Breitenstein, Raymond G. Dilley, Carl H. Rieckmann and Marles Larson Nicholls; graduate student Robert M. Amick; graduating seniors Paula Latham Wilmot and Jo Ann Hacker, and junior Anita Bell.

Of the graduates, Rorvik is a student in the Columbia University Graduate School of Journalism, Goligoski a reporter for the Sacramento Bee, Dilley director of in-school services for the Vermont Educational Television Network, Rieckmann a reporter for the Great Falls Tribune and Leader and Mrs. Nicholls a reporter for the Bellingham, Wash., Herald.
